

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am grateful for the education and encouragement I received from the faculty and administration of The Florida State University College of Music, and for the love, patience, and support of my dear family, colleagues, and friends. Collectively, their words and deeds contributed greatly to this document and helped me grow as a scholar and a musician.

I thank my dissertation advisor, Douglass Seaton, for his uncompromising principles and many examples of scholarly work. I have benefited from his insistence on carefully organized writing and clear logic. The members of my committee also provided thorough editorial guidance as I prepared this document. They include Charles Brewer and Douglas Fisher, who served on my committee from its inception, and Jeffery Kite-Powell, who replaced Denise Von Glahn when a scheduling conflict prevented her from reading the final versions of my work. I could not have hoped for a finer group of teachers. I am also grateful to my alma mater for supporting my work with a Dissertation Research Grant in 2003-04.

Frank Heidlberger informed me during the early stages of my work that a score to Weber's Das Waldmädchen had been found in St. Petersburg. I have benefited from his continued interest in this investigation of Weber's early experiences with Steinsberg and his colleagues from Prague. Many other exceptional scholars helped me while I was in Prague and Vienna.

For his gracious hospitality and friendship, I thank David Beveridge. Through him I met Adolf Scherl, Alena Jakubcová, and Jitka Ludvova at Prague's Divadelní ústav. This state-run institute, dedicated to preserving and sharing Czech theater history, became my home away from home. Drs. Jakubcová and Ludvova shared with me the well-organized historical and bibliographic resources of the institute, providing me with a comfortable work space and expert guidance, all of which contributed immeasurably to the success of my research. Dr. Scherl also directed certain aspects of this investigation, generously sharing his personal notes and detailed knowledge of Czech archival sources.

I thank the administration and staff of the National Library of the Czech Republic, the Archives of the Capital City of Prague, the National Theater Archive, the State Regional Archive at Prague, and the National Museum of the Czech Republic. My appreciation is also extended to Markéta Kabelková and Vlasta Koubská for their assistance with the collections of the Czech Museum of Music and the Department of Theater Studies of the National Museum of the Czech Republic, respectively.

I am similarly indebted to the staff of the library at the Österreichisches Theatermuseum and the Musiksammlung of the Österreichisches Nationalbibliothek for their efficient, professional, and courteous assistance. David Buch provided helpful directions, contacts, and scheduling information during a too-brief visit to Vienna. For the comfort of family, I also thank Marilyn and Roger Stone—what a happy coincidence that our paths crossed so far from home!

Stuart Burnham gave me generous practical advice about traveling and conducting musicological research in the Czech Republic. He also put me in touch with Luboš and Helena Weiser, the couple who allowed me to live in their beautiful home for many weeks. Their countless acts of kindness remain my fondest memories of Prague. Ivan Sury was equally friendly and helpful during my stay, for which I am most grateful.

I thank the many fine scholars in North Carolina who assisted and encouraged my research, especially Sarah Dorsey, Ted Hunter, and Doryl Jensen. Sweet Sarah, thank you for everything—you are the finest kind of music librarian! My gratitude also extends to Eleanor McCrickard, Carol Marsh, David Levy, Elizabeth Keathley, David Nelson, Aubrey Garlington, Jane Perry-Camp, and Susan Andreatta, each of whom took an interest in my work, offering ideas, advice, and generous encouragement along the way.

To Helga and Jeff, I extend my heartfelt appreciation for their friendship and balanced approach to life. It has been invigorating to share good times with them and then get right back to work.

I am most grateful for the daily contributions of my family, whose love provided my most important source of strength and determination. For the quiet sacrifices they withstood, and for their ongoing faithfulness, I thank my children Ashleigh and Justin. I also thank my mother and father, to whom this work is dedicated. Their gift of music lessons set me on this path long ago. Dad's soaring spirit gave me courage to finish my work—and I know he was watching me while I was in Europe. Mom became my most important pen-pal during an otherwise solitary time, reminding me that family matters most in life. I am also grateful to the members of my extended family, including in-laws, sisters, brothers, aunts, and uncles, each of whom helped me in many different ways as I pursued this goal.

My life has been graced by the comfort and love of a very special man, my husband John, who listened attentively to my ideas, read through and edited early drafts, accommodated me with the time and space necessary to think and write, funded my travels, prepared meals, patiently took up hobbies, and was always near to lift my spirit whenever I felt down. I will always be grateful for his love, patience, encouragement, and understanding.
